MEMO ENDORSED

Re: United States v. Christopher Schulze
07 Cr. 1079 (SCR)

Dear Judge Robinson:

The defendant in the above-referenced case was arrested on December 21, 2007. That same day, the FBI executed court-authorized search warrants for his home and his vehicle.

The search warrants, which were authorized by Chief Magistrate Judge Smith, included a provision specifying that, unless the Government made further application, any computer devices seized would be searched within 30 days and either retained as evidence or returned. The FBI seized, from the defendant's home, two hard drives, a lap-top computer and a desk-top computer, as well as over a hundred compact disks. From the defendant's vehicle, the FBI seized a lap-top computer.

The seized computer devices have been delivered to an FBI analyst with CART (the Computer Analysis and Response Team) so that CART can image them and they can be analyzed. Thus far, CART has imaged the drive from the lap-top computer seized from the vehicle. Analysis of this drive confirms that it contains child pornography. Thus, the lap-top will be retained as evidence. Additional time, however, is required for CART to image the remaining computer devices and for analysis of these devices to occur. Accordingly, the Government requests an additional thirty days. In the event that the imaging and

The Government has until March 1, 2008 to perform the imaging and analysis of the defendant's computer hard drives. If additional time is necessary the Government must make application to this Court.
